The ELEMENTS and PRACTICE
OF RIGGING,
SEAMANSHIP, AND NAVAL TACTICS.

LEAIVING wholly untouched the subject of ship-building, it has been the studied object of the authors of this work, that it shall be a CYCLOPEDIA OF NAVAL ART AND SCIENCE, useful alike to the NAVAL ARTIST and the BRITISH SEAMAN. The following analysis will best shew how this design is executed.

The principal arts necessary and contributory to the equipment of a ship, are those which relate to the making of MASTS, ROPES, ANCHORS, SAILS, and BLOCKS, the combination of all the forming the RIGGING. These connected subjects are therefore the first part. They are treated with a uniformity which has been calculated for clearness and precision. MAST-MAKING, which includes in it the making of YARDS, BOWSPRITS, BOOMS, GAFFS, TOPS, TRESTLE-TREE CROSS-TREES, &c. is preceded by an alphabetical explanation of the terms used in that art, followed by ample directions for making them.

The making of ROPES, ANCHORS, SAILS, and BLOCKS, proceeds in the same uniform, particular, and extensive, manner.

RIGGING is discussed with equal clearness. The explanation of the terms precedes: Then follow directions for performing the most minute operations, such as KNOTTING, SPLICING, SEWING, WORKING, &c. The RIGGING PREPARED IN THE HOUSE is next particularised, and the mode of preparing it explained: After which, how to apply all this previous knowledge, and equip a ship for sea, are taught, in the PROGRESSIVE METHOD OF RIGGING SHIPS.

Numerous TABLES are introduced, to elucidate the different subjects. Under the head of RIGGING, will be found TABLES of the QUANTITIES and DIMENSIONS of all the STANDING and RUNNING RIGGING belonging to a ship of each class in the royal navy.

The second part contains the celebrated and demonstrated THEORY of working ships by Bourlé de Villehuet; together with a PRACTICE of SEAMANSHIP, which consists of the most extensive collection of Directions for the performance of naval operations; not only such as are necessary for the working and security of a ship on the ocean, but such as are incidental to her situation in a harbour. And all that is known and practised of NAVAL TACTICS, from M. Morogues Vicomte de Grenier, will be found under that division.

In this one work, therefore, are concentrated two series of subjects; connected with, but dependent on, each other. The SEAMAN, who knows what can be and is performed by the NAVAL ARTIST, and who knows the construction and powers of the minutest parts of a ship's rigging, comes a better judge of how the naval arts may be improved, or how more effectually directed to the purposes of SEAMANSHIP. While the NAVAL ARTIST, on the other hand, who is acquainted with the objects of a SEAMAN's pursuit, will be better enabled so to direct the arts he professes, to facilitate the attainment of those objects. Thus each reflects a light upon the other; and, from the joint study of both, a reasonable hope may be indulged, that improvement of NAVAL SCIENCE will be greatly accelerated in Great-Britain.
